

Masthead Logo

The Iowa Review

Volume 42
Issue 2 Fall 2012

Article 38

Fall 2012

The Lakes

Alice Miller

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Miller, Alice. "The Lakes." The Iowa Review 42.2 (2012): 140-141. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.7182>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

ALICE MILLER

THE LAKES

The lakes were incapable of being owned. They turned wild. Their phones rang noon and night, lines curled round and lingering off bright cliff-faces. And the lakes, they kissed those faces; they dangled their voices off precipices. The lakes always remembered their mothers; they could will any dry eyes wet.

They did not stand, as we do,

trying to turn street corners
into wetlands by spitting.

*

During the avalanche, you stooped under an awning to suck the light up from my ankles. You bent low, under slapped-down snow like a paperclip,

but as it turned out, anklelight wasn't suckable and you couldn't clip

the ground together. So, we fell well short; well, so what?

*

It was late when we learned we ourselves were hungry lakes, waiting to burst our own stiff banks, waiting for the world to crack

right across—just so our mouths might slip, so we might slide

and tip
our liquid bodies

till one poured into the other.